Anasis 2 is South Korea's first dedicated military communications satellite. Alcatel Space supplied both the multimitation satellite, which is built by Airbus Defence and Space, and the Ground Station which will be operated by the Korean Agency for Defense Development (ADD). South Korea's Defense Acquisition Program Administration (DAPA) contracted with Lockheed Martin in 2014 for a military comsat, which was as part of an offset package into the purchase of 40 F-35 combat aircraft. Lockheed Martin decided not to build the satellite by themselves, but subcontracted it in 2016 to Airbus Defence and Space after encountering difficulties in building the KMIISatCom satellite for the contracted price. The satellite is expected to go into Geostationary Orbit to provide a wide 24 hour coverage of the Korean peninsula, although many details of the mission are being kept as military secrets.

The Republic of Korea Armed Forces, also known as the ROK Armed Forces, are the armed forces of South Korea. The ROK Armed Forces is one of the largest standing armed forces in the world.
