Open Mon-Sat, 10am to 4pm

After about 8 minutes, the two side boosters will return to Land- ing Zone 1 at Cape Canaveral Air Force Station, and land in tan- dom. After releasing its payload, the central core will land on an autonomous barge about 400 miles out to sea in the Atlantic Ocean about 9 minutes after launch.

The satellite will be launched on a SpaceX Falcon Heavy rocket consisting of three Falcon 9 rocket bodies strapped together to form a single rocket with 27 engines providing the required thrust at liftoff. Shortly after launch, the main core will throttle down to conserve fuel, as the side boosters propel the rocket into space. The two side boosters will drop off after 2-1/2 minutes of flight, and the central core will continue to push the payload towards its intended orbit.

As a geostationary broadcast and communications satellite, it is intended for an orbit in the Clark Belt along Earth's equator above 30.5° E Longitude. ArabSat 6A was built by Lockheed Martin in Denver CO based on their A2100 spacecraft bus struc- ture.

Founded in 1976 by the 21 member-states of the Arab League, ArabSat has been serving the growing communications needs of the Arab world, Middle East, and Southern Europe for over 40 years. It operates from its headquarter in Riyadh in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and two Satellite control stations in Riyadh and Tunis.
