Members of ISS Expedition 64 traveling on this flight are NASA Astronauts Mike Hopkins as commander, pilot Victor Glover, mission specialist Shannon Walker, and veteran Japanese astronaut Soichi Noguchi of JAXA, the Japanese Aerospace Exploration Agency.

The Crew-1 mission is the first regularly scheduled launch of an ISS (International Space Station) Expedition crew from American soil since the end of the Space Shuttle Era in 2011. A previous crewed flight was merely a test flight of the Falcon 9 Crew Dragon launch system. The crew has named their Dragon capsule Resilience.

The Mission Patch shows a dragon's head depicting the name of the SpaceX Crew Dragon capsule that will carry the crew to and from orbit, a large number One as the mission number, A Space Station symbol above the dragon's head, as well as symbols along the bottom depicting the four previous crewed (NASA no longer says 'manned') space programs. These are symbols for the Space Shuttle, Apollo, Gemini, and Mercury programs, each of which have monuments in Space View Park in Titusville FL dedicated to the Astronauts that flew on them, and the local space workers who built and worked on the equipment for the programs.
