

Unmanned Spacecraft taking supplies to the Station usually travel to within 30 feet (10 meters) of the Station, and are then grabbed by the Canadarm 2 robot arm, and then "berthed" to a Station port. Manned capsules are usually piloted into a Docking

SpaceX is contracted by NASA to provide flight services for the space agency to get equipment, supplies, and experiments to and from the ISS under the Commercial Resupply Services contract, as well as crewmembers and cargo under the Commercial Crew Program. It is up to SpaceX to provide the method of getting that stuff and personnel up to the Station, and to match orbits. NASA is 'branding' this launch under the name 'Launch America'.

Shuttle in 2011.

Astronauts from American soil since the retirement of the Space Shuttle in 2011. The previous unmanned DM-1 launch proved the capsule is safe enough for human spaceflight. This is the first launch of a Crew Dragon spacecraft to the International Space Station under the designation SPX-DM2. The capsule will be manned by two NASA Astronauts, Bob Behken and Doug Hurley. The Dragon to reach the ISS, giving the astronauts the opportunity to check out the spacecraft's systems. The astronauts are expected to be a part of the Space Station crew for 2 to 3 months. They will return to Earth, with a splashdown in the Atlantic Ocean near Cape Canaveral.
