Launching cargo on a Falcon 9 Rocket for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration

2021-06-03, 1:29 pmEDT

SpaceX-22, the 22nd Commercial Resupply Services mission provided by SpaceX for NASA, is an uncrewed cargo mission to the ISS (International Space Station). It is packed with more than 7,300 pounds of research equipment, crew supplies, and hardware, including replacement solar Panels.

The SpaceX Dragon 2 spacecraft will launch on a Falcon 9 booster from Launch Complex 39A at the Kennedy Space Center. About 2-1/2 minutes after launch, the second stage is released pushing the Dragon capsule into a matching orbit with the ISS. At 9-1/2 minutes into the mission, the second stage releases the Dragon cargo craft to continue on to the ISS alone. As Dragon reaches its preliminary orbit, it will deploy its own solar panels and begin a series of thruster firings to reach the International Space Station. It will take about 24 hours to arrive at Station.

The Falcon 9 first stage from this launch will land 8-1/2 minutes after launch on an autonomous landing barge in the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of South Carolina. It will be too far from launch viewing sites to be seen.
