

Capella Space

The SpaceX Rideshare program allows small satellite operators to get their payloads into space at a reduced cost when they 'share the ride'. College and even high school students can get together to build Microsats, and get into the Rideshare program. Your school science teacher can help you find out how.

Information can yield data on atmospheric conditions useful in weather forecasts.

A microsatellite for PlanetIQ (of Golden CO, USA) is also booked to launch with SAOCOM-1B and Capella's radar satellite. The GNOMES (GNSS Navigation and Occultation Measurement Satellite) with a mass of ~ 30 kg is a small microsatellite being developed by PlanetIQ to collect radio occultation data by measuring the effects of the atmosphere on signals broadcast by GPS, GLONASS, Galileo and BeiDou navigation satellites. The information

The SAOCOM (Satélite Argentino de Observación Con Microondas) is an Earth Resources and Communications satellite for the government of Argentina, and complements the already orbiting SOACOM 1A satellite. 1B will join 1A in a circular, sun synchronous polar orbit 165 km above the Earth. The satellites are meant to provide the overall objective of an effective Earth observation and disaster monitoring capability.
