Türksat A.Ş. is the national Satellite Communications carrier in the country of Turkey. They are having SpaceX launch Türksat 5A into a Geostationary Orbit over their region of the world above 31° East Longitude. Satellites in Geostationary orbit have the advantage of circling the globe in the same amount of time the Earth rotates in one day. This allows a satellite put over the equator at this altitude to appear to remain fixed in one spot in the sky. That way a satellite receiving antenna can simply point to the satellite to receive it's signals. The Falcon 9 Booster Rocket will launch from SLC 40 at the Cape Canaveral Space Force Base, and once it release the second stage with the payload, it will begin it's reentry to the atmosphere, and landing on a specially prepared barge in the Atlantic Ocean off the coast of South Carolina, about 400 miles down-range. The landing will not be visible to launch viewers, as it will be over the horizon from The Cape.
